Bachelor's Degree in Psychology

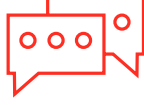

Understanding human behavior to help society.

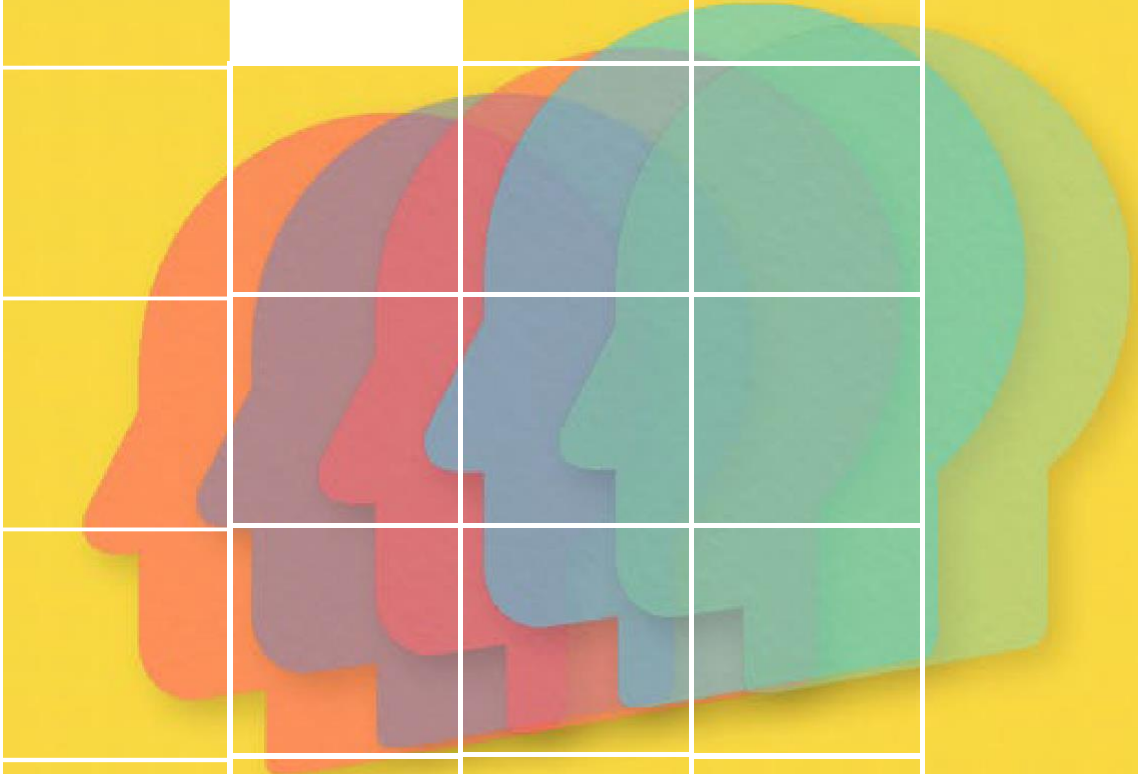

Psychology today is facing new challenges related to the great global changes that are taking place and that are affecting both individuals and society as a whole. This science needs trained professionals to provide answers to problems such as eating disorders, bullying and others related to new technologies, such as cyberbullying, nomophobia or internet dependency, among others.

At our University, the learning system focuses on the simulation of real clinical cases to develop the skills of future psychologists and achieve their specialization in the understanding of human behavior.

Training at the height of emotions.

Practice from the first courses in a simulated environment with actors playing psychopathologies such as panic attacks or depression. Learn how to manage the emotions experienced by patients and learn the phases of therapy in a safe context.
